

Editorial

As explicitly stated in the last issue (see Editorial, Vol. 2, No. 3), e-Perimetron is publishing in this issue a response to the note by Liu Gang, appeared in the same issue, concerning a Chinese bi-hemispherical world map.

The issue is well known in the international community of cartography and map historians. It raised vivid discussions in various media and fora in the last period, especially in the net. Most probably it will raise, in various ways, more discussions and controversy in the future. The interested reader can find easily a huge amount of relevant news and arguments by just searching in the web.

e-Perimetron is repeating its main concentration on topics related to sciences and technologies which accompany and support the study of history of cartography, maps and mapmaking offering tools for access and analysis and decided to not come back again to the particular story or any other of similar character.
